ANTI-VACCINATION.

Second Dose—It Ought to Take.

Editor Boundabout:

I assure you that I do not want to antagonize, nor to interfere in public health. If my case is in the wrong, I am assured of a good support, which urges me on. There are two sides to all questions, and the judge is to be the public. A presentation of facts and truths is all that is wanted. (Malice and enmity not allowed.)

The endorsement of vaccination so strongly by the health board, is a perpetual monument to their credit, and will go down in history in memorial. I do not attempt to question their sincerity, nor the good will they have for the public's health. In presenting the facts of the terrible evils of this practice, which has to its credit one death and over fifty emaciated arms and developed disease in this city, with no proof to sustain its endorsement by the board of health, I assure them that the public does not and will not endorse the vaccination of the school children, without physical examination.

I quote you this statement made before the B. M. C., by one of the best medical authority, Dr. E. E. Hume: "That he refused to vaccinate Mr. H.'s son on account of hereditary tuberculosis—would give him free a certificate." What do you think of that? This statement alone condemns the manner of the board of health is trying to force upon the school children. Only trust to the results. There has appeared one bad arm from the last inoculation (at hospital). We trust there will be no more.

The reports of some of the surgeons in the U. S. Army during the Spanish-American war at Camp Chickamauga, giving the details of the ravages of vaccination. Many arms taken off. The entire army made unfit for duty. Many deaths attributed to it, and the condemnation of its use. The statements too long to print here. Vaccine virus is one of the commonest, strongest poisons produced by nature. It is the same as found in a corpse, and what the uncivilized use in poisoning their arrows; like the rot in an apple, one speck may contaminate an entire barrel. The meat we eat

BRILLIANT GRAND OPERA SEASON IN LOUISVILLE.

Mr. Henry W. Savage's Celebrated Company, With Orchestra of Fifty Pieces under Three Conductors, Coming to Macauley's Theatre in "The Valkyrie," "Lohengrin," and "Tannhauser" for Three Days, Beginning Thursday Evening, April 12.

The most brilliant society and operatic event in the musical history of Louisville will be the Wagner Opera Festival of five days beginning Thursday, April 12, under Mr. Henry W. Savage's combined Parsifal and English Grand Opera Companies and orchestra of fifty musicians, with four performances a day.

Opera lovers in Louisville and surrounding cities have been looking forward to this rare occasion since the first announcement that Manager Savage would send his splendid organization to the Louisville Opera Company, the largest and most expensive aggregation of artists, musicians and productions that has ever attempted a cross-continent tour.

The singing forces alone number over 150 people.

To convey the enormous mechanical and electric effects, a special Grand Opera train of fourteen coaches and seventy-foot baggage cars is required.

The company itself is a combination of Mr. Savage's Parsifal and English Opera companies of last season, there being over a score of prima donnas, tenors, baritones and basses in addition to the great singing chorus of nearly 100 voices.

Wagner's music-dramas are the most pretentious ever offered to the public by any company of native artists.

Wagner's sonorous music-dramas have become the most popular of all the great masterworks, and two of them are to be heard.

The Opera Festival will open with a grand performance of Wagner's "Parsifal" and mystic music-drama—"The Valkyrie," followed by "Lohengrin," with its romance of the Holy Grail.

Knight who rescues the Princess Elsa, its stirring Wedding scene, and other grand monodies under Wagnerian conductor Elliott Schenck.

"Lohengrin" is specially reserved for the Friday evening's bill.

One of the choicest offerings of the season will be Saturday night, when "Tannhauser" with its immortal overture, seductive Venusberg music, sung by Venus and the Minstrel Knight, the inspiring "Pilgrims' Chorus," great drama for the beautiful Elizabeth, and patriotic song to the Evening Star, for Wolfram, will be given.

"The Valkyrie" will be the Saturday matinee off.

The performances will be arranged as follows:

Thursday evening, April 12, Prelude at 7:30—"The Valkyrie," Friday evening, April 13, Overture at 8 p. m.—"Lohengrin," Saturday matinee, April 14, Pre-lude at 7:30—"The Valkyrie," Saturday evening, April 14, Overture at 8 p. m.—"Tannhauser."

Each opera will be staged with the same elaborate attention that has made the Savage productions famous, and the casts will be made up of the best English-singing artists on the stage.

It has always been a part of Manager Savage's educational plan in populating Grand Opera in English, to give his performances at prices so high that the money paid for other high-class theatrical attractions, so that all classes of music lovers may enjoy the entire series of operas. Accordingly the scale of prices will range from $1 to $10.

Season tickets for all performances are now on sale at Montenegro-Riehm Music Co., permitting patrons to select their seats for four performances in advance of the regular ticket that opens on Monday, April 9, at the theatre.

Many others made of others containing remittances payable to John T. Macauley, manager Macauley's Theatre, Louisville, Ky., when accompanied by a self-addressed and stamped envelope to expedite delivery. Letters filled as far as possible to location desired. Expiration rates have been announced on all railroads within a radius of 100 miles of Louisville during the opera season.

IN THE SAME OLD WAY.

They've found out how consumption may be positively cured: Ills that used to worry people need no longer be endured. They've discovered lymphs and glands, so we have been plainly told.

That will stop the sad necessity of ever growing old; They are finding out the microbes, they're advancing day by day. But people keep on dying in the same old-fashioned way.

Word may come to-morrow morning that some new disease has been mastered by some doctor here at home or over seas;

They are stopping all the fevers and arresting all the ills

That the human form is heir to with their serums and their plasters;

They are causing men to wonder at their triumphs every day. But people keep on dying in the same old-fashioned way.

What a wondrous thing is science, they can take a germ from you. An consult its inclinations and exploit its foibles, too;

They can master all the stomachs of very little use;

They can master all its functions with the gizzard of a goose;

They are cutting, they are doping, they're advancing day by day. But people keep on dying in the same old-fashioned way.

THE LIVER QUARANTINE

"TAKING HIS MEALS OUT."

Churned eating has ruined many a man's stomach. The digestion-destroying process is gradual, often unnoticed at first. But as the disease develops until the liver fails, the digestive organs give way, and almost countless ills assails the man who endeavors to economize time at the expense of his health.

A torpid liver causes a quarantine of the entire system. It blocks in the increased serum and body poisons which affords them full play, inviting some serious illness.

In families where August Flower is used, a sluggish liver and constipation are unknown, so are all stomach ailments, as well as all other types of health, headaches and kidneys and bladder affections. No well-regulated family should be without this standard remedy.

STRICKEN WITH PARALYSIS.

Mrs. Mary Tobin received a dispatch from Pine Bluff, Ark., on Wednesday, bringing the sad news that Miss Mary Ann Purcell (now Sister Cecilia), an adopted daughter of Mrs. Tobin, had been stricken with apoplexy, at the nunneries in that city.

Sister Cecilia joined the nuns at Nazareth, when she was living in this city, and went from Nazareth to Holly Springs, Miss., Little Rock, Ark., and finally to Pine Bluff. She is remembered well by our older citizens when she lived with Mrs. Tobin.

Later—This good woman died at 2 o'clock Thursday morning. The remains will be brought to Nazareth for burial.

EFFORT TO STOP GAMBLING.

The grand jury stirred up municipal matters, on Wednesday, by asking Mayor Hume if the police force had taken the "anti-gambling oath," as required by law.

It developed that this had been "overlooked." That night Mayor Hume summoned the police and had the oath administered and issued instructions for a vigorous enforcement of the law against gaming.

We shall see, now, whether this is done. "It is said" there are several gambling joints running.

READ THEM—THEY WILL
AMPLY REPAY
THE TIME.

We begin, in this issue, the publication of a series of articles, under the caption "Knives," by one of our most valued lady friends of the old time, who is a graceful and forcible writer, and we bespeak for them a careful reading assuring our readers that they will thoroughly enjoy each chapter.

Our friend has also promised to contribute some reminiscences of Frankfort of the long ago, which will be equally as interesting and instructive.

BUYS HANDSOME BUILDING.

The Capital Trust Company has purchased of the Mason & Hoge Co., the handsome three-story building on the corner of Main and St. Clair streets, where this company is now located.

The Kentucky River Mills office and the office of Rev. Dr. J. McC. Blayney will be vacated May 1st, when Judge T. L. Edelen, who is the president of the Trust Company, will move into the second floor, and will occupy all the rooms on that floor.

The amount paid for the building was $20,000, which is considered a good one.

FIFTY CENTS

In some conditions the gain from the use of Scott's Emulsion is very rapid. For this reason we put up a fifty-cent size, which is enough for an ordinary cough or cold or useful as a trial for babies and children. In other conditions the gain is slower—health cannot be built up in a day. In such cases Scott's Emulsion must be taken as nourishment; a food rather than a medicine. It's a food for tired and weak digestions.

Grasp of Grip Prostrated Me.

Dr. Miles' Nervine Built Up My

Shattered Nerves and Gave Me an Appetite.

Of the millions of people who today suffer from nervous or heart diseases a large percentage trace the cause directly to deadly LaGrippe. It is a germ disease, and makes a direct attack upon the nerves, cutting an era from the life of the patient's vitality at the lowest ebb. If LaGrippe has left you with a shattered nervous system, with loss of appetite, lack of energy, insomnia, and depression, Dr. Miles' Nervine will strengthen the weakened nerves with that grip has done, bring back appetite, and restore the lost vitality and energy.

"I want to write this testimonial for the benefit of those who have suffered from that dreaded disease—LaGrippe. I suffered several weeks with it, and when I seemed to have shaken it off, I was shipwrecked (I suffered almost death), and finally my daughter recommended Dr. Miles' Nervine to me and I took it daily six times a day. It gave me relief, built up my shattered nerves and gave me a splendid appetite. I cannot speak too highly of the value of each bottle of Dr. Miles' Nervine. Insist on taking it and take instant relief by getting a bottle of Dr. Miles' Nervine. Insist on taking it and take instant relief by getting a bottle of Dr. Miles' Nervine. ### "THE KERMESSE."

A Brilliant Festival of Song and Dance.

Society in Louisville is now all excitement over an entertainment which will be given the last of April under the auspices of the Woman's Club.

It is to be a "Kermess"—a beautiful festival of dancing and tableaux, and will take place at Macauley's Theatre on Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday evenings, April 23, 24, 25 and 26, with special matinées for children on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, when "The Sleeping Beauty" will be given.

The Kermess will consist of a series of beautiful dances in which the most prominent young men and women of the city will take part, and each dance will be in charge of some matron, who will act as chaperone.

There will be the dances of the Nations—Spanish, Irish, Indian, War Dance, French Minuet, Dutch, Scotch Reel, English Hornpipe, the Four Seasons and the sextet from "Fantana." The young people who will take part will be elaborately gowned in specially designed costumes. Dazzling scenes, in tableaux and motion, will make an entrancing spectacle well worth seeing and long to be remembered.

Miss Lila Agnew Stewart, of New York, is in charge of the performances, and has the rehearsals well under way.

The Louisville production will make the seventieth time she has successfully directed such an affair, and this one promises to equal, if not exceed, her former entertainments.

Mail orders for reserved seats can be sent to Macauley's Theatre after the 16th of April.

CLIMATIC CURES.

The influence of climatic conditions in the cure of consumption is very much overrated. The poor patient, too, can do much better at home by proper attention to food digestion, and a regular use of German Syrup. Free expectoration in the morning is a decided benefit by German Syrup, as is a night's rest and the absence of that weak, cold, cough and debilitating night sweat. Restless nights and the exhaustion due to coughing, the greatest danger and dread of the consumptive, can be prevented or stopped by taking German Syrup liberally and regularly. Should you be able to go to a warmer climate, you will find that of the thousands of consumptives there the few who are benefited and regain strength are those that use German Syrup. (Written for the Roundabout.)
FOR THE TEACHERS—THURSDAY.

Going to school reminds one of the "little pigs going to market"—the one who stays at home takes in the thought of practice perfected; the one who goes to school of knowledge gained. On this one spring morning, Mr. Youngfellow intended to prove the truth or fallacy of the assertion, and arranged his program, formulated his recitations, and smiled in anticipation at the concurrent results. He assumed: "In future I shall avoid looking backward, or forward. I shall endeavor to look upward and succeed!"

It is a happy faculty these roses blossoms of youth! What hopes are enveloped in the submission to the inevitable, what wisdom endowed; what courage sustained; what exertion required to pave the road to upward attainment, and to fight the battles of life with the excellent weapons of offense and defense!

A small scrap of restricted law and by-law asserted itself just so soon as the bell was rung for "school to take up." Something was wrong on the scholastic horizon. A faint cloud of warning hung out the danger signal, and when Ben Tarver and Sam Fleming came to blows in the very doorway of the teacher's presence, it was time to climb down from the airy nothings of far away "might be" to the present is and was.

The teacher was a man of small resource. He had advocated prompt and positive obedience to every rule, and woe be to the boy or the girl who would dare to break one of the least in his curriculum of law and order, so in a brusque and mandatory tone, his voice quivering with suppressed anger, and excitement, he demanded the reason for the recent exhibition of fist-fight, and the cause of same?

Ben Adams proffered the expected reply: "Both boys are to blame, teacher. They claimed a knife found in the hemp brake, and neither would consent to give it up."

"Is the knife yours, Ben Tarver?"

"Yes, sir; it is mine!"

"Is the knife yours, Sam Fleming?"

"Yes, sir; it is mine!"

"Get to your books children! We shall discover relative propositions when the hour arrives. Let me hear no further whisperings over the matter." The reading of the Psalms was hurried, and the routine of class hearing as uninterrupted as so many threecold tales, even the atmosphere of the schoolroom seemed oppressive, and unduly debilitating, the children yawning and twisting about as if devoid of incentive, and altogether miserable.

A rap was heard on the door and in walked the superintendent, Mr. Joy. He was a jolly-faced, good-humored looking man, who immediately won the attention of the children, and outlined the psychic element of an attractiveness seen and felt in the sympathetic meaning of the term.

He asked numberless questions, and evidenced interest in the current events of student life. Taking up the class work from the lesson of the hour, which was history, he gave in brief, explicit language the story of Washington, as a surveyor. With what potent power he portrayed the young man's professional career. How he gave up his own wishes for the pleasure of another. How God sustained him in the ordeal, prepared him for the destined future, and fitted him (at the hour) for the time when he should need the very preparation then undergone for his country's honor, his country's freedom.

It was well done. The children received the instruction with attentiveness. All the haze of indifference had passed away, and even the fighting propensities of the bellicose seemed merged in a desire to emulate the example of the "Father of America."

Other classes followed. Mr. Joy bringing into each recitation something of itself. When the time came for a judge and a jury, he asked to be allowed to conduct the preliminaries and to select the jury. Both requests were readily granted, and the jury was empannelled. Ben and Sam should be their own lawyers and conduct their own cases. It was a novel, yet exciting suit, and the evidence drawn out proved that the knife belonged to Dan Jones, who had lost it in the early fall, and the jury gave it to him without a dissenting vote. The verdict of guilty was declared in the case of lighting, and both boys were required to apologize to the teacher, the school, and when they mutually agreed to make friends such a shout went up as to shake the rafters of the old log schoolhouse. The superintendent had gained a victory. He had made friends for life. He had turned the feet of the teacher toward the highway of learning, and made possible the education of the children. If the patrons and the trustees had only been present, what a greater cause had been espoused, but alas, this was but one of a number of schools where the children were all orphans, and the trustees were absent from lack of interest or want of encouragement in the enforcement of duty. Mr. Joy dwelt at length upon these profound trusts, saying that if the fathers did not take more interest in the education of the children that the mothers should undertake to hold the reigns of government, and become trustees and custodians of its birthrights.

Mr. Youngfellow thanked the visitor in his own, as well as the names of the children, and during the rest of the day returned renewed thanks for a number of things explained to him, and of which he stood so much in need. It mattered very little if the regular text books recitations were not followed to the letter because the superintendent had discovered "a Milton," a "Franklin," and a "Howard," in the company of boys, and resolved to aid these in securing employment, and scholarship in his own city of industrial celebrity. Thursday had now enwoven about its sacred precincts the new possibilities of success. There had arisen in the small, rural confines the promise of a great reward to be found at the end of school. And the conscious occasion was the present opportune moment of forward endearment.

I heard laughter and sweet voices as we drove by on our homeward journey. School had been dismissed. Sam and Ben were arm in arm beside the teacher who was smiling and arranging a fishing frolic in the early vacation. Peace was in the air and the feeling of security was a sure sign of the visit of Mr. Joy.

KNIVES.

By Alf. Allfriend.

Chapter I.

The day upon which our story opened is perfectly described in the following lines by Robert Burns Wilson:

"Across the dotted fields of gathered grain
The summer breathes a deep repose.
Mysterious murmuring mingle on the plain,
And from the blurred and blended brake there flows.

The murmuring echoes of some strain
Once heard in paradise, perchance—
Who knows?"

The bride elect, Una Heart, having spent a few minutes in silent prayer, had just arisen from her devotions when the bridegroom, David, Dare, was announced to them, with Una's parents (Una was an only child), repaired to the village church where the marriage ceremony was reverently performed. Una's parents, in company with her relatives, had consented to accompany them during their bridal tour, which had been arranged to occupy several weeks, traveling through the country in private carriages, and at night tenting, or in inns, the bridegroom, a host of more than ordinary attractions presented itself, the party to avail themselves of its accommodations.

Much time had been enjoyed in this former, some time past, the carriage containing the bride and groom being in advance, and some times in the rear of the "old folks," but never very far distant.

The road is now very rough and rocky, since we have left the shadow of the grand old trees, the other intense heat and having passed a night at a cozy little hotel in the picturesque village of Altona, the rising bell ringing, and David, Dare, ready for his bride. "We are now at the for of this road and I think it is a fine opportunity for us, my dear, to leave the 'old folks' and continue our journey by the new road. It is true we are in shade trees, but the road is smooth and we do not want to be always in driving of others."

Una listened quietly until David had finished his remarks, and when the two others had stepped out, she realized that there are forces acting upon her affections which by their combined powers, infuse into her being a sense of unutterable agony, alternating with indescribable joy. A few seconds elapse before she speaks again for her young reply is matchless.

"Dear David, life seems to consist of sunshine and shadows, and where these are intermingled we are nearest content. 'Tis true there are other joys peaking in tandem. 'Tis true there are, now and then, unpleasant sensations produced by the expression of opinions which do not obtain our acquiescence, or perhaps a remark is made which wounds us like meteors, but such words are shallow and time will surely heal them. Do you not think so, David?"

"Yes, yes, dear Una, but it is so much better to avoid the wounds, and besides we have our independence, or others will not think us capable of taking care of ourselves, and it will be so much easier to cut loose from the 'old folks' now than at any future time."

"Dear David do not say 'cut loose'—I have a special fear of knives, and that with those knives the dearest ties that bind me to earth shall be severed."

"In fancy, see them passing to and fro between them and who's sheltered in the 'old folks'?"

"With Una, darling, I flattered myself that I was 'dearest of all on earth' to you, but it seems that I am altogether ignored in your list of dear ones, and since I have become something of a bore to you, send toadstools flying about before your mental vision, perhaps I had better take the new road alone and leave you with your 'dear ones.' Permit me to wish you a pleasant ride, and for the time being, adieu."

Before Una could reply to David's last remarks, he had gone and from her window she beheld him take a seat beside a stranger in a light vehicle, and pass quickly out of sight, along the narrow road.

A hand, which was one of the less poignant knifes, had entered Una's bosom and was severing the tendrils, which her loving heart had put forth to entwine her husband, and but for the promise, "As thy day is so bright thy strength be," her poor spirit had passed out of its physical casket.

The sudden shock which she had sustained resulted in "brain fever," and during her delirium she tried to explain to David, whom she saw in his light vehicle, that she had misunderstood her, and she begged him to take out the knife, which she knew he did not mean to let fall into her heart.

Being delighted at what he called "truth" played upon his wife," David entered his traveling companion with an expression of his opinions in reference to married life, saying: "When I married I had made up my mind to be the head of my family, and if she showed no disposition to advance sentiments contrary to mine, I would give her a lesson, in the beginning, which, once learned, she could not possibly forget, and I think when I meet her at Wal-

Hill, she will be quite ready to accept my views in regard to the continuation of our tour."

"Don't you think you were a little hasty," said his companion, "I can not perceive anything in your wife's language indicative of a necessity for discipline. On the contrary, she seems to be natural—her language, if you report it correctly, evidences one of the most elevating characteristics, one to be encouraged, rather than suppressed."

"But I tell you, I intend to have my own way," said David, "and she must not presume to offer any argument when I express a preference upon any subject."

"Well, since you are so determined to have your own way, I believe your arguments can not effect a change in your plans, and as we are nearing Walnut Hill, at which place we must part company, I will give you my card, hoping you will be as considerate as to your success or otherwise."

"All right," said David, "You shall hear from me, and I am sure you will agree with me when I inform you how nicely my plans are progressing."

The new road, and a fast horse, had enabled David to reach Walnut Hill much earlier than the time which with whom he had arranged. She knew him well enough to know that Una would condemn him for his being detained there alone, but instead of meeting Una at Walnut Hill, the mail brought him intelligence that she was bound in her room, after breakfast was announced, in an inexcusable condition. When she revived her reason seemed to be dethroned and her physician apprehended a prolonged nervous fever.

Una, who had a grudge against David

Dare, but Una will avoid such tediums when she finds out that her better half is not to be scared into submission to her silly whims," exclaimed David, "I will try to prove to my husband how well he does to encourage such a childlessness, I will ignore having received this letter and just go over to see old Mrs. Dare," this widowed mother said David, after having read the letter.

His mother's home being near Walnut Hill, a walk of a few minutes brought him to her presence, where the following conversation occurred:

"Eureka! Mother, I'm married, but here I am without my wife; she and I quarreled and I left her with her dearest friends, and to prove the correctness of my assertion, I will read this letter, written to her mother. Don't you think that is a little too much acting?"

David was so much accustomed to Una's ways, and her peculiar wishes, his pretty intrigue, that he according to Una similar motives in regard to the letter, and was "racking his brain" for a scheme by which he could "get even with her."

To his astonishment his mother seemed alarmed, and said, "I fear you regard this too lightly—this is too serious for a joke and if I were you, I would go back to Una immediately. I know Una too well to believe her capable of any effort to deceive you, on the contrary, her peculiarly sensitive organization would lead me to believe that the contents of this letter are true, and my dear boy I fear there is something more to it than you know."

Being so true herself, she no doubt thought you meant what you said, and poor child, has endured all the agony she would have experienced if you had really meant to do this to her."

"Mother, you talk as if you were all off." Una ought to have confidence enough in me to know that I would do nothing of the kind. She knows I love her and would never do anything to injure her in a minute's sorrow, and I think she ought to be willing to go, or do as I wish. But here's an end to this unlikely message," and touching the letter to his cigar, it was soon reduced to ashes.
